The Safe Cig Does Extensive Lab Testing on Liquid Nicotine Solution

There has been much information in the news lately about electronic cigarettes. The review team at ElectronicCigarettesReviews.net has seen a rise in reviews and questions about the safety of electronic cigarettes and the ingredients that make up the liquid nicotine solution found in e-cigarettes.

Online PR News – 19-July-2010 Many visitors to the popular website, ElectronicCigarettesReviews.net, have written in asking about the safety of e-cigarettes and the ingredients that make up the liquid nicotine solution. With conflicting information that is published by various media sources, it is difficult for consumers to know who to believe when it comes to electronic cigarette facts and fiction. Being a trusted source in the electronic cigarette industry, the review team of the e-cigarette review site responded to a recent article on electronic cigarettes written in the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel.

The founder of ElectronicCigarettesReviews.net, Dustin Erickson, had the following to say about the article that was published over the weekend. "This is another example of someone stating that electronic cigarettes have been touted as a useful option to quit smoking, but going on to state that the evidence to support that fact is lacking. The article doesn't go on to give any real evidence though. I would say that based on the hundreds of reviews that have been written by real smokers on our website, electronic cigarettes can be useful in quitting smoking."

Erickson went on to state that "the article also calls into question the safety of the liquid solution that holds the nicotine. There are at least 3 brands reviewed on our site that I know do extensive testing on their liquid nicotine solution to ensure that they aren't putting harmful chemicals in the nicotine solution."

Three of the top reviewed brands on the website perform extensive testing in a lab to ensure the safety of the liquid nicotine solution, including the Safe Cig, Blu and eSmoke.
