Online PR News – 02-September-2010 - 'Value Judgments blog' is Uncensored: From Politics to Pop Culture

Los Angeles, CA September 2, 2010 – Judge Cristina Perez recently won her third consecutive Daytime Emmy Award as the host of Fox Television's Cristina's Court. This makes Perez the sole recipient of the Emmy in the Outstanding Legal/Courtroom Program category, created in 2008. The author, television personality, immigration attorney and public speaker has also revamped her official [website \[www.cristinaperez.tv\]\(http://www.cristinaperez.tv\)](#) including the launch of a brand new blog called Value Judgments.

On her new blog, Cristina expresses her candid personal opinions on current events ranging from politics to pop culture, all rooted in her strong sense of moral values and the letter of the law. In her first post, the judge pulls no punches as she reveals her recent revelation that after being a card carrying lifelong Democrat, she now feels more connected to conservative viewpoints. Both long-time viewers and new fans alike can expect Value Judgments to provide the uncensored commentary that Cristina is well-known for.

"There are so many issues affecting us all right now with more news breaking every day. A blog is a great way to publicly share your opinions on those issues and find out what others are thinking in return, all in a hip modern way. It's a great forum for people to connect and I am excited about making those connections through Value Judgments!"

The blog is part of the redesign of Cristina's official website: www.cristinaperez.tv. The site now features a fresh, vibrant look, while incorporating new content, including for Cristina's recently released book, It's All About the Woman Who Wears It: 10 Laws for Being Smart, Successful, and Sexy, Too.

Fans are encouraged to visit Judge Cristina's new website at: www.cristinaperez.tv and follow her Value Judgments blog.
